Writing and Cultural Rhetorics explores the rhetorical traditions and practices of diverse communities: this version of the course focuses specifically on Native American and Indigenous Rhetorics, past and present. We will discuss how Indigenous people have developed rhetorical practices both within their communities and in relation to others over time, with a particular focus on how Native Americans have responded to the shifting rhetorical demands of US settler colonialism.