Writing 3030 is an upper-division writing course designed for Salt Lake Community College (SLCC) students who are interested in majoring in Writing & Rhetoric Studies (WRS) at the U. This course recognizes that moving from one writing context to another—including transferring between institutions—is an opportunity to become a more flexible, reflective, and self-aware writer. Through scholarly readings, class discussions, and primary research projects, students will critically examine what it means to transfer writing knowledge across locations in their home communities, SLCC, and the U. Over the course of the semester, students will also connect with faculty, staff, and peers in the Department of Writing & Rhetoric Studies and learn about other resources on campus that will support their transition to the U.
Writing as Social Practice

In this course, students are introduced to key theories of writing. Emphasis is placed on the cultural, social, and rhetorical practices that have given rise to and shape writing processes, documents, and ultimately writers themselves. Students will encounter various forms of writing, and theories that consider the impact of material and social factors, such as education on writing systems, and theories that consider the writer/reader relationship that is established through writing.

Fulfills Humanities Exploration (HF)

Required Course for Major & Minor

Summer 2019 (first half) T H  9:00am - 11:50am
Signification, or meaning, of any text is made up not only of its verbal but also its visual elements—layout, color, typography, illustrations, etc. These elements contribute to the text’s argument and the ways that it is interpreted by audiences.

In Writing 4030, we’ll discuss theories of visual perception and rhetorically analyze different types of persuasive texts—including comics, short films, advertisements, journalistic photographs, web sites, and graphs & charts. You’ll examine the kinds of visual arguments used in your own discipline, as well as compose your own information visualization texts.
