Usability Testing

Usability Testing is a course that prepares students for writing in the workplace. It focuses on the types of user experience (UX) evaluation that organizations employ to develop and improve their products. Students will learn principles of user-centered document design to help them meet the needs of their intended audiences. Students will also be introduced to different methods and technologies associated with usability testing, in order to determine whether users of texts - such as instructions or brochures or websites - are able to employ them successfully. These usability testing methods and technologies will be put into practice with a community engaged learning project.
